Lots of people want to do their part in helping the environment, and one way to do it is by installing solar panels to cut back on the use of electricity. Unfortunately, the cost of these panels can be pretty exorbitant. Not everyone is willing to pay $73 a month for 730 kilowatt hours in addition to the other expenses they pay per month, so not everyone is willing to put such panels in place.

Benicia company EcoVolt Solar came up with a solution: providing a solar panel program that would pay consumers annually for using its product.

The way it works is simple: EcoVolt Solar installs solar systems at no cost to the residents, parts and labor included. The company then price matches the solar energy at the rate of a resident's local electricity service provider, and residents receive an annual cutback for use of the roof. According to EcoVolt CEO Bill Hilliard, EcoVolt was founded to make going solar more attractive to mass market consumers. EcoVolt has partnered with WattzOn, the company that manages the Benicia Home Efficiency Program. For more information, go to www.EcoVoltSolar.com.

Alex was absent today, so Darell served as acting president:

Yes, Darrell was back! Thank you for filling in during Alex's absence! Good job!
